Yummy Yummy World

Once there was a hungry child called Michael. He adored food. He had seven courses a day. These were: breakfast, elevenses, lunch, half past twosies, starters, main course and desert. He was aged eight.

One day Michael was feeling rather peckish so he went to get a cookie from the cupboard but the handle of the cupboard handle was glowing which is very unusual but he still did not mind. When he touched the handle to get this cookie his surroundings changed and he was in a different place but this was no ordinary place because it was made out of FOOD.

The floor was made out of freshly made barbecue burger patties and the puddles were ketchup. You could see the little children (which were little gingerbread men) playing with a ball (which was a lovely smelling cherry bonbon). You could hear the big gingerbread men talking about real boring stuff like bills and plumbing. You know like in real life.

Michael started to look round this unusual place. After about five minutes he noticed something, something following him, something big and awfully smelly which was behind him. When he looked round he saw that something, the something that was big and awfully pongy. This thing was the most dreaded Mushy Manky Mushroom soup, “uh oh” he said and right after that he gulped.

He started to run away back to the cupboard. When the petrified Michael reached the ginger bread men he immediately stopped and waited for them to throw the bonbon ball. When they threw it he caught it and ate it in one gulp and then kept on running. When Michael got to the cupboard he had one last look and then jumped through whilst grabbing a fresh home baked chocolate chip cookie.
